PERFECTIONISM LIES IN NATURE

The nature is a perfectionist. Think of a snail shell - the perfect spiral. A spiral staircase inspired by this shape opens onto the living rooms of Penthouse W, where white dominates at first glance. Dark brown furniture and design elements create exciting contrasts, which are loosened by the targeted use of green plants.

White offers a neutral stage on which STEININGER'S custom-made masterpieces really come into their own. The interior design concept and the entire handling of the interior design were taken over and implemented by STEININGER. Right-angled, angular forms lose their austerity with round lamps and curved chairs. Light and dark, ball and cuboid complement each other perfectly. And let us see: Perfectionism is obviously also in the nature of the owner.

In STEININGER's kitchen, which is individually tailored to the customer's wishes, the cooking island with a work surface made of stone focuses on enjoyment and conviviality. The tall cupboard system without handles is made to measure, becomes part of the wall when closed and leaves a feeling of minimalist tidiness.

The open room concept allows to breathe deeply - the individual living areas merge seamlessly into one another: Kitchen, dining room and living area form one unit.

In the living area, the free-standing fireplace provides a cosy atmosphere. The anthracite-coloured concrete base invites to linger and, with the Living Divani sofa and the Casalis carpet, it sets a purist accent to the floor, walls and ceiling, which are discreetly kept in white.

Order and tidiness run like a red thread from the visual concept and the choice of colours to the furniture. This is particularly noticeable in the purist bedroom. The self-standing wardrobe by Rimadesio with indirect lighting sets the scene for the clothes through a glazed front. The bed of Living Divani is characterized by its clear lines.

The spa is the haven of peace in Penthouse W. In the steam bath from Klafs, the original Bisazza mosaic stones in various shades of brown create a relaxing atmosphere of well-being. From the spiral staircase, open kitchen and living area to bedroom and spa - the art of skipping the unimportant and concentrating on the essence is reflected in the interior design of Penthouse W.
